Big Island architect selected for AD100, firm receives AIA Regional Award.

Kamuela, Hawai'i – January 6, 2010 --- Mark de Reus, founder of de Reus Architects on the Big Island, has been honored with inclusion in Architectural Digest's new AD 100, their 2010 international listing of the world's top one hundred designers and architects. His designs were published in Architectural Digest as "Hawaiian Craftsman Residence" in May 2009 and "Allure of the Islands" in May 2007.

AIA Northwest and Pacific Region recently bestowed the firm with a Citation Award for Kuki'o Golf Club, their most recent resort amenity at Kuki'o. This project won an Award of Excellence in 2008 from the Honolulu Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. The Kuki'o Golf Club is located on the leeward slope of Hualalai, overlooking the North Kona coastline. Its five separate thatched roof pavilions, are sited to maximize views and integrate into the natural landscape. Finish materials including basalt and local ohia wood, were chosen to give the club a feeling of rustic luxury and appropriateness for its rugged setting.
